

Liz Skilton is an Associate Professor of History and the J.J. Burdin and Helen Burdin/BORSF Endowed Professor in Louisiana Studies at the University of Louisiana at Lafayette. Skilton received her Ph.D. in History in 2013 from Tulane University, an M.A. in History in 2010 from Tulane University, and a B.A. in History and Sociology from Case Western Reserve University in 2007. She is the author of Tempest: Hurricane Naming and American Culture (LSU Press, June 2019), the co-author of the textbook, The Louisiana Experience (2016), and the forthcoming co-edited collection, Reimagining American Disasters (LSU Press, 2023).

Skilton is also the co-Founder of the Guilbeau Center for Public History at UL Lafayette and the current Director of Public History, teaching courses on and directing research related to disasters, the environment, gender, and public humanities in the US Gulf South. Skilton's interests in coastal and environmental disaster research have led to multiple collaborative projects with students such as the Recent Louisiana Disasters Oral History Project, which includes public-facing community-driven research funded through grants from the National Science Foundation, National Endowment for the Humanities, Louisiana Endowment for the Humanities, and the Louisiana Board of Regents.